BARKLEY PREDICTS CONSCRIPTION BILL PASSAGE TODAY

Expects First Such Peacetime
Military Bill Through
By Midnight

A BURST OF SPEED
Would Make 12,000,000 Men
Liable For One Year
Of Training

By Robert A. Magill

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Senate majority leader Barkley today predicted the first peacetime military conscription bill in American history will be passed by midnight and sent to the House.

Barkley was certain the Senate will continue the burst of speed it put on in a day and night session yesterday, and successfully over-ride the real threats to the bill to make 12,000,000 men between 21 and 31 liable for a year's training.

With most of the minor amendments out of the way, proponents of the bill face three major attempts to greatly alter the conscription program. These thrusts at the bill are sponsored by Sens. Maloney, D. Conn.; Taft, R. Ohio, and Walsh, D. Mass.

Maloney would postpone conscription until January 1st. Walsh would postpone it until Congress declares a state of emergency or war exists, and Taft would postpone it entirely and authorize the President to set up a vast network of military training camps through voluntary enlistment.

Barkley asserted:
"I'm certain the Maloney, Taft and Walsh substitutes will be defeated. I predict that we will reach a final vote on the bill by midnight at the latest. In view of the progress made yesterday it will not be necessary to ask for a debate limitation unless something unforeseen happens."

Judge Rosen Dies; World War Veteran

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 27.—(INS)—Judge Theodore Rosen, 44, distinguished for his heroism during the World War in which he lost an eye and an arm, died today of bronchial pneumonia, which developed from a cold contracted while at the Fort Meade military training camp last month.

Friends saw tragic irony in his sudden death, pointing to the fact that the patriotism which led him to enlist in the World War, in which he received 24 wounds, also prompted him to participate in the training camp movement. He was among the first group of professional and business men to enroll for the 30-day course at Fort Meade. Twice cited for bravery during the World War, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross by Congress.

QUAKERTOWN SEEKS AIRPLANE FACTORY

Firm Using Maiwurm Invention May Locate In Upper Bucks Borough

PHILA. MEN INTERESTED

QUAKERTOWN, Aug. 27.—Quakertown, seeking to expand as an industrial center, may get an airplane factory in the near future.

A new company, the Stainless Steel Aircraft Corporation, secured a charter for the purpose of engaging in the manufacture of airplanes and aircraft parts, utilizing a new invention of Paul Maiwurm, of Finland, for mass production of parts entering into wings and fuselage.

This new machine, known as the universal micromitering machine, is said to increase the production of wing parts to five and ten times the quantity of any other machine known. Later, aircraft research has developed what is known as a fast wing for high-speed flying of military craft. And this requires complicated mitering. As many as four compound miters in accurate relation to each other, and precise length are required on a single rib or spar-member.

A group of Philadelphia men associated themselves with Mr. Maiwurm. They visited Quakertown last week to inspect the original plant of the Quaker Equipment Company, which company is operating in two factories, having taken over the Toltickon Hosiery Mill plant this past Spring, which provides ample space for their production of refrigeration equipment.

Delay And The Draft

Washington, Aug. 26.

IT IS unthinkable that the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill, now pending in the Senate, should fail, and, of course, it will not. Failure of the bill would be complete admission to the world that our system of government, of which we are so proud and which we are determined to save, is not worth saving because it cannot function in a crisis—even to save itself.

HERE is a proposal not only urged by the President but endorsed by the Republican candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Willkie. It has the whole-hearted support of the Administration, but it is just strongly

Willkie to Return to Campaign Base

New York, Aug. 27.—Having hammered away on national defense matters for five days in New York, which is extremely sensitive to the topic, Wendell Willkie prepared today to return to Rushville, Ind., his campaign base of operations.

Millinder to Appear Before Grand Jury

Bellefonte, Aug. 27.—Richard Millinder, held for the slaying of Fay Gates, blonde factory worker, appears today before the Centre County Grand Jury. The Commonwealth indicated it has "relevant and competent" evidence which it intends to use against the 22-year-old highway worker and neighbor of the slain girl. A petition was presented to have the defendant examine the evidence in the case.

Predict Big Air Raids Soon

Berlin, Aug. 27.—Nazi authorities today again announced the imminence of a "grand scale" air attack on the British Isles as the population of Berlin resumed normal activity following their second air raid alarm in two days. Grand Marshal Goering's air armada is "all set for the signal" to let on in a full-scale onslaught, it was said. "The initial stage of individual attacks upon military objectives and decimation of the Royal Air Force is nearing its close," a spokesman said. "British claims of huge German air losses will be pricked like a soap bubble when waves of thousands of bombers and fighters darken the skies in the not too distant future."

Nazi spokesmen predicted the real offensive will come "before the leaves turn brown"—rejecting British claims that Germany is considering abandoning the real "blitzkrieg" until Spring. No bombs were dropped during the attempted British attack on Berlin this morning, and the all clear sounded after 40 minutes of alarm.

READY TO REGISTER ALIENS HERE TODAY

Bristol Post Office Prepared to Handle Registration of Aliens

WHAT LAW PROVIDES

The Bristol post office is ready to register all aliens in this area beginning today and continuing for the next four months.

Employees in 2815 Pennsylvania post-offices today anticipated a rush of first-day registrations as listing and fingerprinting the State's 300,000 aliens got under way.

The Federally-enacted law provides that every non-citizen over the age of 14 must go voluntarily to a post-office within the next four months to answer 15 questions and be fingerprinted. There are no fees.

Officials emphasized that even persons with first citizenship papers must register.

After an employee has completed the questionnaire the non-citizen will be fingerprinted and later will receive through the mail an identification card reproducing one thumbprint. Registration will take about 20 minutes.

Spokesmen for the U. S. Department of Justice, which is directing the registration of the nation's estimated 3,600,000 aliens, point out that all information will be strictly confidential and will be held under the supervision of the attorney-general.

DINNER SESSION

The Women's Auxiliary of Bucks County Medical Society has planned to be at the Second District Councillor Meeting of the Pennsylvania Medical Society, to be held on September 12th at Trainer's, Route 309, near Quakertown. Wives of the physicians are urged to attend with the doctors.

Perkasie Borough Council to float a bond issue of $150,000 to refinance a debt on the municipally-owned electric light plant of approximately that amount.

An ordinance approving the bond issue and calling for a referendum at the November election passed first and second readings at a special meeting of borough council. Final reading will be given the ordinance on September 3rd.

In the past council has been making short-term loans from about 25 banks to cover the indebtedness, at interest rates up to six per cent. It is council's opinion that the bond issue can be floated at two and one-quarter per cent interest.

According to the plans, the bonds will range in denomination from $100 to $500, and council expects to retire about $15,000 of the total amount annually for the next ten years.

Earl H. Bergen, who was employed by Robert L. Clymer in his store at Doylestown, and who left later to join the United States Army during the World War, has been appointed assistant postmaster in Augusta, Ga. It has been learned in Doylestown. The appointment was made August 16th.

Mr. Bergen, who went to Doylestown from Yardley and who, while employed by the County Seat's leading merchant enlisted in the army, paid a tribute to training he received under Mr. Clymer's direction.

"I know you will be most glad to hear of my promotion," said Mr. Bergen. "I owe my success, a lot of it, to you for the training I received as a young man while employed by you," wrote Mr. Bergen to his former employer, Mr. Clymer.

A card and novelty party will be held at the Chambers Street Hall, Morrisville, on September 26th, it was announced today, sponsored by the Lower Bucks County Democratic committee-men and women.

The committee includes Chairman Mrs. Stewart Lord, Mrs. Ellen Kane, Edward Mullen, Mrs. LeRoy B. Stackhouse, Mrs. Herbert H. LaRue and Walter Phillips.

Grand View Hospital, Sellersville, looking ahead to its annual fund campaign, will hold the annual campaign dinner at the hospital for the first time.

The meeting is tentatively arranged for October 14th with the drive opening the following day. In recent years the meetings of the drive workers have been held in the Sellersville fire hall, but with the completion of the new building at Grand View, quarters have been provided in the basement of the hospital.

Hospital directors, in session Tuesday evening, were informed that the $6000 goal for a special fund drive has been reached. The drive opened after a generous donor offered a check of $2000 if the community raised an additional $4000.

MEN'S FASHION VAGARIES

Men laugh at the women for being "slaves of fashion," but they do more or less similar slaving themselves. Take this question of the traditional retirement of the straw hat. There are many warm days in late September, and even in early October, when the cool, refreshing feel of the straw hat is appropriate and comforting.

But the fatal toll of the straw hat bell is heard on September 15. After that, woe be to the man who ventures out crowned with the old straw lid. In some circles, someone is likely to bring his fist through that inoffensive topper, and so mutilate it that it can go only to the dump.

Or if it is not greeted so violently, humorous associates may offer sharp witticisms about wearing last year's birds' nests, which fill the wearer's soul with humiliation. The commands of fashion are complied with when he next emerges from the kind shelter of home.

This straw hat custom has its uses. Most men wear their straws altogether too long, with the result that they appear faded, soiled and generally disreputable. But for the annual Fall Hat Day, many of them would keep wearing their straws until they looked like the covering of a scarecrow.

As a whole, men are not as responsive to the whims of style as are women. They accept what is given them. If styles vary, many of them do not discover the fact until an article of clothing is little but rags. This is not true of students, or of young men generally. They are careful watchers of the latest fads. They inquire anxiously whether hats will have wider brims, or whether it is still de trop to wear a hat; whether trousers will be narrow or floppy, and whether shirttails will be in or out. Thus they expect to make deep dents in the heart of the girl friend.

PRINTING FOR ALL

Printing is more widely used today than ever before, but like many indispensable aids to modern living, man is in the habit of taking it for granted, somewhat like the air he breathes. But there is printing and printing. A printing press is an inanimate thing that can turn out an ordinary or extraordinary product, depending upon the skill of the operator. Poor printing, although it may be lower in price, is the least economical to buy.

Good printing, done with modern type expertly composed and on excellent paper, is always worth the slight additional cost. The business firm or individual is advertising good taste and intelligence by using good printing. Both are assets that cannot be prized too highly.

Good printing requires architecture as well as press work. Printers should be consulted now about that job that will be needed this fall. An extra week or two in its preparation will add nothing to the bill, but it will enable the printing craftsman to do his utmost to please. Printing can be done in a matter of hours or minutes when necessary, but when speed is not all-important a better product can be produced if time is not pressing.

The advertising potentialities of printing cannot be overestimated. Its invention was the greatest forward step so far taken by man.

Of course, Doc Einstein becomes an American because he likes democracy. Democracy, by the way, is our theory, and we think well of it.

The Great Game of Politics

opponents Communists or Bundites or fifth columnists or any other invidious and detestable name. Those groups, all hostile to the preservation of the American system, unquestionably are hostile to the conscription legislation, anxious, if they cannot defeat it, at least to emasculate and delay it. Beyond question they are doing all they can to hamstring the bill and retard its passage. Opposing it in the Senate, however, are men who cannot be accused of either sympathy, co-operation or affiliation with any of these elements. On the contrary, they are Senators of undoubted patriotism, ability and sincerity. It does no good to denounce them; certainly, none to call them names.

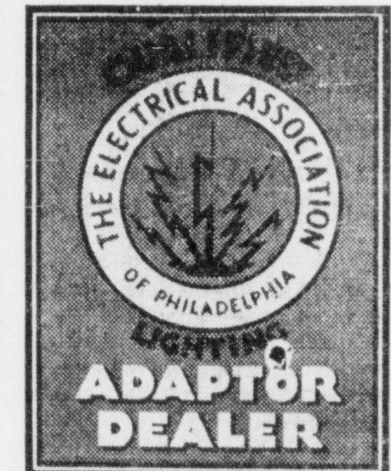

BUT they ought not to be allowed to stand in the way of this vital measure. Because they are not only in a small minority in the Senate itself but they represent an insignificant fraction of the people. If and when the proposal comes to a vote, it will have a very large majority. There is no possibility of its being close. Why, then, the delay? And why the apprehension? If the bill is certain to pass in the end—and it is—why is a handful of stubborn men permitted to prolong dangerously a futile debate and jockey the bill into a corner?

A LARGE majority of the Senate belongs to the President's party and a majority belongs to the President's own faction of the party. His party enemies as well as his party friends are with him on this issue. So is the titular leader of the Republican party who is running against him for the Presidency. So are practically all the anti-New Deal newspapers against which he constantly inveighs and of whose unfairness he continuously complains. And public sentiment supports him. One wonders what else a man needs to put a bill through Congress. What else is it possible to have? What does he lack? Where is the trouble?

THE answer seems to be leadership. In the Senate, Administration affairs are in the hands of Senator Alben Barkley. He is as ineffectual and bungling a majority leader as any party has had in a long time. In forcing his selection four years ago Mr. Roosevelt exhibited singularly poor judgment, which he must have regretted many times.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

"Why did you think Crystal killed herself?" Rue asked Brule.

"Because Crystal—Crystal was extraordinarily determined about anything she wanted. It's not a pleasant thing to say, but it's the truth; if Crystal had decided that by using a threat of suicide she could get something she wanted, she would use it as a threat. Crystal—well, just believe me when I tell you that, for it's the truth. Believe me and be patient with Madge, poor child. . . . At any rate that's what I thought; Alicia kept hinting at murder, but it didn't seem possible—then, so when the police inquiry began and I heard about those confounded letters, naturally I went straight to Alicia to ask her why she had suggested murder when she did—right after Crystal's death. I arranged to meet her about nine-thirty or so; she said she'd leave the opera, and I was to pick her up in the car, and I did. I didn't see you and Andy; and I did send Andy to take you because I thought you'd be disappointed about not going, and yet I had to talk to Alicia—I had to find out why, when Crystal died, as long ago as that, Alicia had thought of murder."

"And did you—"

"No. She—she either knew nothing or wouldn't tell me. She knew—or said she knew—nothing of the letters. If I could only discover who wrote those letters! It's got to be someone close to us; no one else would care. I suppose I have enemies, but I can't think of anyone who would do anything just like that—who would know, even, the circumstances. There's only Madge, Steven, you—"

"But I—"

"Oh, I know it stood to hurt you more than anyone else; and I know you didn't write them. At first I thought it must be Madge; she's resented your presence here, and she's tried to make things as tough for you as she possibly can—I don't think I've seen that, for I have. But I kept hoping that time and patience would smooth things over. When I talked to Madge about the letters, though, she convinced me that she'd never heard of them. Steven? Well, I can't see Steven doing just that, either. Also it seemed to me he was genuinely astonished to learn of the police inquiry into Crystal's death. There's Andy—but it would hurt Andy. He was the attending physician; he wouldn't stir up trouble for himself, or for me, for that matter. Andy's loyal to me. And he rises or falls with me, and he knows it; he's still dependent in a large measure upon my backing. I don't mean Andy couldn't go out and make a living without me; he could. But nevertheless he needs me. Besides, Andy—well, there it is again. Andy just wouldn't do anything like that. Alicia would have no reason to write the letters. The servants, I think, are altogether out. There are remains, of the people who had opportunity to observe something of Crystal's death and who are in any way close to us and thus might conceivably have a motive, Guy—"

"Guy?"

Brule shrugged.
"Why not? Guy's been a friend of Crystal's all his life. Mine, too, but he lived right next door to Crystal since they were both children. He handled all her business for her—and his father before him for Crystal's people. She was an only child as Guy was. Guy is a good lawyer, but he has no conscience in particular; he's a good friend of mine, I think—but if there was a choice between me and Crystal I think he'd cling to Crystal's interests. But I may be wrong. I can't exactly see Guy bestirring himself for any reason like that; to avenge anybody, I mean."

"There's one more person who might have written those letters—Julie Garder."

"Why?" she said after a moment.

"I don't know," he said rather wearily. "But she'd be in a position to guess that Crystal's death was murder. I knew Julie, really pretty well. All those years in the surgery. She was almost too conscientious. And she was starved for the kind of life that would have given her a real balance; I mean, in her loneliness events that another person could have taken in their stride would have with Julie loomed very large. There might have been an increasing perplexity and worry about having (as her action in coming here would indicate) actually some clue to that murder in her own possession. She might have worried and seethed secretly for months. And she was a sop to her conscience, written those letters. She wouldn't have wanted to make a public accusation; she had her own future to consider and I," said Brule rather grimly, "was in a position to make or mar that future. I think Julie wrote those letters. I think she had some definite clue in her possession; I think she came here to talk to you about that clue. And—I think you have it, too. Except you don't know what it is. It must be some small thing, something that you remember of Crystal's illness and death—or that you could remember. But something that was so natural, so completely a part of the routine of things that it means nothing to you."

He watched her anxiously for a moment. "Would it help you remember events of that day if we could find the charts?"

She looked at him doubtfully.

"I don't know. Perhaps. Where are the charts?"

"I don't know. Somehow I don't think they were destroyed. But Gross can remember nothing about them. I certainly didn't take them away from Crystal's room. Madge says she doesn't even remember seeing them; I've even asked Steven about them, and he said, 'Charts? What charts?' I know Crystal's medicines were thrown out; Rachel, I remember—or someone—asked me about them, and I said, naturally, throw them away."

Rue said after a moment: "If you thought of suicide—"

"Crystal wouldn't have put poison in her medicine. She would have taken it alone. . . . And now it seems she didn't do that."

"Brule, who could have put the poison in the glass in my room?"

"Anyone in the house, of course; anyone who could have got hold of the stuff. That's another thing, Rue, that convinces me you must have some extremely important bit of evidence in your possession even if you don't know it. For that attempt on your life—wasn't really an attempt on your life. I mean it wasn't meant to succeed."

"You mean it was a—threat?"

"Exactly. You've thought that yourself, haven't you? You see, even if you had poured water into the glass, you would have known at your first taste that there was something wrong. You'd never have taken enough to kill you."

"It's not been—exactly pleasant, thinking of it," said Rue in a low voice.

"It was a threat. Think of it only as that."

"Who—"

"I don't know. Madge—so far as I know—has had no access at all to the stuff that was found in the glass. Alicia I don't know about, but I'd say offhand she wouldn't have had them with her, that night, for she had no chance to send for her things. Steven, of course, has a supply of practically everything there is."

"Steven?"

"Certainly. He's had neuritis for years; every time he gets an attack he gets scared about his hands. The only thing I can do for him is keep him supplied with all kinds of sedatives."

"Then Steven had the poison that was found. . . . Her voice broke off. Brule nodded coolly.

"Oh, yes. The poison found in Crystal's body and in Julie's. None of these drugs is harmful except in excess. As you know. But I had access to them too; and Andy. And you yourself, Rue."

She leaned forward again, anxiously.

"Brule, there's something that's worried me. I'm afraid the police have found it. Yet if they have I don't see what's keeping them from arresting me at once. I—"

"Arresting you!" He got quickly to his feet and came to stand beside her. "What on earth do you mean?"

"My—I had a lot of medicines. In a little bag. Left over from nursing—you know how a nurse gradually acquires a lot of medicine."

"Where is it?"

"I don't know. I brought it here—in a trunk, I think, along with my other things. It may be in my room; I can't think where else it would be. There are shelves and drawers in the dressing room; it must have been placed there. Rachel might remember; she helped me unpack. But I've been—I haven't wanted to ask her. And the police have closed the room. I've had to ask permission just to go in and get—clothes and things; a policeman watching me all the time. I couldn't search for the bag."

"What was in it?"

"I don't remember exactly: a pretty complete supply, I suppose."

"Was there morphine in your drug supply?"

"Yes, of course. I don't know how much. I'd never had occasion to draw on my own supply; I had accumulated gradually. There couldn't have been much."

"But enough," said Brule, "enough. . . . The look on his face frightened her. He saw that, too, and said quickly: "Well, when the room is opened we'll have a look. If the police had found it they would have arrested you. Instantly. So almost certainly they didn't. If someone else did—we'll find it. . . . Look here, Rue." He put his hand suddenly under her chin, lifting her face so he could look directly, deeply into it.

"Rue—it's asking a lot, perhaps. It's asking a little blindness and a lot of faith on your part. But will you—trust me? And do the things I've asked you to do?"

His hand cradled under her chin softly. She had all at once, with breath-taking sharpness, a desire to turn her face, moving it softly against that hand. So her lips touched it.

Trust them, he'd said. Do what he asked.

Dodge Cars To Have
Fluid Drive In 1941

Recent rumors and new-model guesses associating the 1941 Dodge with "a revolutionary new driving feature," now crystallize into the definite information that the newest models of this popular automobile will feature the "Fluid Drive."

The "Fluid Drive," as employed by Dodge and described by Forest H. Akers, vice-president and director of sales, "has been in development for the past eight years; it is without question the most vital improvement in motor car operation since the introduction of hydraulic four-wheel brakes. 'Exceedingly simple as the new

THE RAMPARTS WE WATCH

Fluid Drive is mechanically, it accomplishes a surprising number of improvements in driving results," says sales chief Akers. "The flexibility of this new fluid-power coupling is such that it reduces gear changing to points where the driver, when he wishes, may do entirely without shifting. While the cars, in the Dodge installation, remain equipped with a transmission giving three forward speeds, the Fluid Drive provides, in addition, an almost infinite variety of in-between speeds which go into action automatically and therefore call for no judgment or attention on the part of the driver."

"The Fluid Drive enables even the inexperienced driver to perform, with perfect safety, such feats as ascending a hill in 'high' at speeds as slow as one or two miles an hour, stopping on the hill, then starting again—without gear shifting, without in the least straining the engine, and without danger of stalling it. "The fact that these improvements

CALLED COPS TOO SOON

Automobile operation are brought about through a liquid coupling of such extreme simplicity that it consists of but two moving parts surrounded by two gallons of closely confined oil—marks an automotive achievement of the first magnitude.

"An important detail in connection with the Dodge Fluid Drive—which has been established in many hundreds of thousands of miles of test driving under every conceivable condition—is that it calls for no service attention, adjustment or periodical oil changes. The oil, acting as the most flexible power transmission medium ever employed, retains its working qualities indefinitely in varying temperatures.

"My prediction is that this new Fluid Drive will lead our motoring millions to an entirely new appreciation of the continuous efforts of automobile engineering to increase the safety and comforts of those who drive and ride."

MOBILE, Ala.—(INS)—"Call the cops!" demanded H. M. Hufstutler, of Palestine, Tex., when he awoke in a Mobile tourist camp. His wallet had disappeared. The cops came. But, meanwhile, Hufstutler had searched the cabin again. He found the missing wallet. It contained $124, and had been mislaid between the bed sheets. Hufstutler thanked the cops for their unnecessary efforts.

NEW ENGLAND AIR CAPITAL

CHICOPEE, Mass.—(INS)—"Chicopee the New England Capital of the Air." Thus reads the inscription on 15 large signs on highways leading into the city, placed by the local Chamber of Commerce. The signs were inspired by the selection of Chicopee as the site for the Northeast Army Air base.

BRILLIANT FIELD OF RACERS TO RIDE IN LANGHORNE MEET

Babe Tancrede and Benny Campanale Are Latest Entrants

ADD LUSTRE TO AFFAIR

Nearly 200 Will Attempt To Qualify On Saturday For The Races

LANGHORNE, Aug. 27.—Babe Tancrede and Benny Campanale are the latest entrants for the 100-mile national championship motorcycle race to be held here, Labor Day.

These lads, out of New England, add lustre to an already brilliant field. Tancrede won the 200-mile road race at Daytona Beach this year, dethroning his team-mate, Campanale. He followed this with a triumph in the 100-mile road race at Lacombe, N. H. Both have been consistent performers in the 100-mile national but so far have failed to score a victory over the Langhorne strip. This season has found them on a spree of wins and they are primed to take the big one in stride.

Entries have been pouring into the offices of the Middle Atlantic Motorcycle Dealers Association and a busy day looms for Saturday when close to 200 riders will attempt to qualify for the big holiday event.

Only 40 will make the grade, the remainder being assigned to the preliminary races of five, 10, and 15 miles. Officials also report a hearty response for the 15-mile side-car race which will be run as part of the Labor Day program.

Trenton Albrights Eliminated in Series

The Trenton Albrights were eliminated from the National Semi-Pro Baseball Congress at Wichita, Kansas, by the Worcester, Mass., team, 3-2.

Liberatore and Lodge were held hitless and Rossi had one out of four. Liberatore handled five chances without an error.

Errors and mis-plays caused the Albrights to go down to defeat, after they had taken a 2-0 lead in the first.

BOXING BOUTS RAINED OUT

GAME CALLED AT 6:15

The Croydon Y. M. A. nine will oppose Johnson's All Stars tonight at 6:15 on the Landreth field.

GAME TOMORROW NIGHT

The King Supply-Diamond Sporting Club baseball game will be played tomorrow evening on the Bensalem high school field. A victory for the Diamond team means that it will be in a deadlock with Croydon Y. M. A. If necessary, a three-game playoff between these two clubs will start Thursday evening. In the event of a King victory, the playoffs between first and third place and second and fourth places will begin Thursday night.

HULMEVILLE WINS

HULMEVILLE, Aug. 27.—Hulmeville baseball team won the first game in the play-off series with Bethayres Sunday, 7-5, in the Twin-County League. Black served as pitcher for Hulmeville, with Shemeley catching; while the battery for Bethayres was Plack, pitcher, and Wilkinson, catcher. "Punkie" Zeffries was the shining light in this, the first of a three-game series. He made some of his usual plays at shortstop, and in the last inning, with two on, one out, and Guether at bat, he turned a sure hit into a double play. Zeffries went back into short center, took a low looper over his head, and while twisting in the air doubled Plack off first base. His home run in the eighth, with two mates aboard, sewed up the game for Hulmeville. Next game will be played at Bethayres next Sunday at 2:30 p. m.

man Fries, and Lewis R. Minster, the Club Sponsor, were the first to pledge their co-operation in seeing to it that young people would take a much more active interest in the well-being of the Church of the Redeemer. William Curtis, Leighton Davis, George Lauer, Mayhew Call, LeRoy Swan, and William Wright have since joined, and have done their part to make the Boys' Club a really active church unit. The club sponsor has been given capable assistance by Louis Tomlinson.

The officers for the year 1944-1945 are: Wayne Vandegrift, president; Mayhew Call, vice-president; Lewis R. Minster, secretary, and Louis Tomlinson, treasurer. The chairmen of the various committees are: Wayne Vandegrift, membership; Neal Juliff, property; Louis Tomlinson, finance; and Lewis R. Minster, order.

It was set down in the constitution of the club that boosting the church was the first condition upon which the club would succeed. This has been carried out to date, and everything that has been accomplished was done by using the principle of self-government in the broadest application possible and not one rule of the church has been violated in so doing. Every member has a voice and a vote. The Rector, Rev. W. W. Williams, and the Club Sponsor, Lewis R. Minster, are both active members. The Boys' Club is pleased to welcome all boys of 16 years or more to its meetings, which are held the first and third Mondays of each month in the basement of the Parish House at 8 o'clock. The next regular meeting will be held the third Monday in September.

Announce Heavy Damage

Berlin, Aug. 27.—Heavy damage to important British bases in violent raids by Nazi war planes was announced today in the official German communique which said—

"Our air force attacked airports and camps in southern England as well as at Portsmouth and destroyed a radio station on the Scilly Islands.

"Three convoys merchant ships received heavy bomb hits north of Fraserburgh.

"On the night of August 26-27, strong German air units attacked Plymouth, one airport in Cornwall, airplane factories at Coventry and Birmingham, and docks and piers at Newcastle and Hull.

"Last night, British planes dropped bombs on several places in the Reich, causing unimportant material damage. Two civilians were killed and eight injured."

British Raid Northern Italy

Rome, Aug. 27.—British air raids on northern Italy during which Turin was bombed and Italian air attacks on British forces in Africa and a convoy in the Mediterranean were announced by the Italian High Command today.

At the same time Italian officials revealed that a German motorized column is participating in Italian operations from Ethiopia.

"Coming from Switzerland, the enemy carried on air raids in several provinces of northern Italy," the communique said. "Violent aerial and anti-air raid reaction prevented the British planes from dropping bombs save for a few at Turin."

Willkie Advocates New Setup For Defense

set-up, whereby the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense has no real authority and no executive head except the President was unworkable.

"Anyone with a rudimentary knowledge of organization knows that no organization can function effectively without a head," Willkie declared.

"On all questions of policy the present Advisory Commission has to go to the President. No President of the United States, no matter how able, with all of his other duties can give adequate attention to the problems that the commission has to consider."

Describing Knudsen, member of the present commission, as one of the ablest men in the country, Willkie declared:

"If the commission were given real authority and Knudsen were made chairman, there isn't any question that Knudsen would have tanks and airplanes rolling off production lines very soon."

Willkie declared that "modern war is based on the production of tanks and airplanes, and similar equipment."

"It has been demonstrated that men as against machines are helpless," he declared, adding:

"With bombs raining down on England, it is time for the bunk and the talk and the conversation to end. Preparedness is primarily a problem of production, production, production."

As he uttered the preceding sentence, Willkie pounded on his desk to emphasize the words, "production, production, production."

Willkie recalled that for more than 20 years the Army has been making defense studies based upon the lessons of the last war, with adaptations to meet changing conditions, and that the War Department had recommended the creation of an industrial board.

Such a board (the War Resources Board) was actually appointed about two years ago, he said, and last year it made a report to the President.

"Up to date that report has been withheld by the President," he complained, adding that "this is still a democracy and the people are entitled to know what was in the report."

"I have not seen the report," Willkie said, "but from knowing some of the men who prepared it, I am satisfied it recommended a method of organizing production."

Recalling that the War Resources Board was dissolved after it had made its unpublished report, Willkie remarked that thereafter there was set-up the Cabinet group known as the Council of National Defense.

"I don't believe any member of that group, whatever his other qualifications, ever had any experience with production," he commented.

Then, Willkie said, the President appointed the Advisory Commission, including such men as Knudsen and Edward R. Stettinius, of which he said:

"Two or three of them were really experienced in production."

But he noted that although the commission was appointed some months ago, it still did not have a chairman and had no real authority.

"This commission should be given authority both by statute and by delegation of power by the President, and it should be given a chairman," he declared.

He added that the President "should lay down broad policies and leave their execution to persons experienced in such matters."

"At the moment," he said, "we are engaged primarily in a problem of production, and this Administration has no experience in practical organization or production."

Expanding his views on the headless condition of the Advisory Council, Willkie snorted:

"You couldn't run a peanut stand if you had seven employees and no directing head."

Referring to the present set-up of the Advisory Commission, Willkie declared:

"When you want to do something besides talk, you have to have organization, and when you don't have it you have jealousies, ineffectiveness, discord, inefficiency, delays and failure. That's what we have today and what we are bound to have, despite the fact that there are some very able men on the commission."

Several times during his press conference criticism of the Advisory Commission set-up, Willkie emphasized that he was not criticizing the individual members, that he was denouncing the Administration for not setting up a workable organization.

Willkie confirmed reports that when he said at Rushville in his acceptance speech that he favored a selective service system, he meant that he favored its establishment immediately.

"I never meant anything else than now," he said.

Previously it had been learned from sources close to the Republican candidate that he felt so strongly on this subject that he was prepared if necessary, to issue a public statement advocating speedy enactment of a selective service bill by Congress. It was indicated that such a statement might be expected if Senate action on the pending Burke-Wadsworth bill were delayed beyond the present week.

But there was one aspect of the selective service problem upon which Willkie declined to comment. He was asked what he thought about the rush of prospective draftees to the marriage license bureau—presumably to establish an exempt status.

"I'm willing to comment on most things," he said with a grin, "but not on love."

Willkie was asked if his plea for action to speed up defense production was intended to include a recommendation that Congress iron out difficulties involved in such matters as amortization allowances for plant expansions.

"This Administration has majorities in both Houses of Congress and if there are any bottlenecks in production, it is the Administration's obligation to put through corrective legislation," he replied.

Willkie's attention was called to a statement by Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for the Presidency, expressing the hope that Willkie would be willing to meet him in a series of face-to-face debates on campaign issues—as Willkie had proposed for himself and President Roosevelt.

"I'm very fond of Norman," Willkie replied, "and if he can induce President Roosevelt to join in, I'll be glad to make it a tri-party debate."

Recent announcements of prospective changes in President Roosevelt's Cabinet were called to Willkie's attention and he was asked if he cared to make any comment.

"It looks like the boys were very much worried about Texas," he replied.

It was assumed he had reference to President Roosevelt's announcement that he would offer the position of Secretary of Commerce to Jesse H. Jones, a prominent Texan.

This afternoon Willkie paid a visit to Manhattan campaign headquarters at 295 E. 42d street, where he addressed about 200 workers and district leaders.

Willkie urged them to work hard to "rescue Manhattan from machine control" and to make every effort to register as many voters as possible.

"I'll predict," he said, "that 90 per cent of those you register will vote for Willkie and McNary."
